'Research in Progress' Seminars returning S1/2021

Jasper's Journal

Welcome back!

Welcome back to another semester of research! Congratulations on making it through an incredibly tough year, especially to those in the final stages of their work. As we kick off the first semester of 2021 it's as important as ever to reinstate good writing habits that may have been disrupted by COVID or the summer break. I know mine took a hit!

Think about where you're at in your research and what you aim to achieve throughout this semester. I'm sure this is nothing new to many, but breaking these goals down with your supervisors into manageable tasks is a strong first step for any semester. For myself, I'm deep in data collection. Conducting interviews, transcribing and conducting first passes through my data are all relatively concrete tasks that I can tick off in my available time.

Finally, just a few housekeeping items — the school will be running a range of HDR workshops throughout semester that are useful for all things research-related. Keep an eye out for invitations.

For those of us who use the campus facilities as a study space I have good news! The research building has been reopened for postgraduate student use. While we still have COVID restrictions in place, with a maximum of four students allowed in for three hours at a time, it's great to be moving back towards normalcy. To book a spot in the research study area, contact Shalini at shalini.lata@nd.edu.au.

I hope everyone had a safe and refreshing break. Keep pushing with your research projects!

All the best with your research,

Jasper
