Graduate Certificate in Health Professional Education

School of Medicine

Are you a health professional with an ambition to work in an educational role in academia or industry? The Graduate Certificate in Health Professional Education at The University of Notre Dame Australia is aimed at health professionals currently transitioning into an educational role. The postgraduate course is flexible and considers your current workload.

Why study this program?

Do you work in a health professional role but would like to improve your educational practice? This Graduate Certificate in Health Professional Education is a highly practical degree and is designed to meet the unique requirements of educators working in health professional contexts.

The industry-focused postgraduate program is aimed at a broad cross-section of health professions including those working in medicine, nursing, and allied health services.

The program encourages you to develop your educational practice in both clinical and non-clinical environments. This degree is flexible because we understand that clinical educators often have multiple priorities – some of which include patient care, supervision, teaching, research and development, management, and administration. The courses that make up this qualification are delivered online, allowing content to be accessed at a time, place, and pace that best suits you.

This qualification provides a starting point for health professionals looking to expand their knowledge, skills and effective learning.

Should you wish to further your education, the Graduate Certificate in Health Professional Education is an articulated qualification that forms the foundation for the Graduate Diploma, and the Master of Health Professional Education.
