This degree program is designed for those who are seeking a broad overview of the business world, rather than specialising in a particular business discipline. Compulsory areas of study include consumer behaviour, economics, business information technology, strategic management, innovation and entrepreneurship and public relations. In addition to your eight business foundation courses and five compulsory courses, you are free to choose seven electives – these range from events management to the psychology of work.

Our graduates pursue many future careers. Banking, the private sector, government administration, advertising, public utilities, management consultancies, energy companies, trade unions, accountancy firms and investment brokers are just a few of many possibilities.
